The sign of the cross is required at certain points of the Mass : the laity sign themselves during the introductory greeting of the service, before the Gospel reading small signs on forehead, lips, and heart and at the final blessing;

optionally, other times during the Mass when the laity often cross themselves are during a blessing with holy water, when concluding the penitential rite, immediately after receiving Communion, and when concluding private prayer after Communion.

It also makes it easier to transport the body even for long distances, during times of day when possible witnesses could be about, without raising suspicion Di Nunno et al.
